AHW to Host WPHA Pre-Conference Workshop

Join for engaging session designed to build your systems change toolkit

Across the public health field, it has long been recognized that to successfully and sustainably improve population health, we must look to change the policies and systems that drive health outcomes. However, implementing effective policy and systems change is easier said than done.

At AHW, we recognize that to drive systems change, we must first understand systems thinking as a way to approach and understand how systems operate and to recognize the conditions that are holding the problem in place.

We invite all WPHA attendees to join us to learn a systems thinking framework that can be applied to community health improvement and community change efforts, and explore a diverse set of tools that will enable you to apply systems thinking skills in your communities.
